The following section gives you a quick overview of Photoshop's various layers and how they work. Using layers Photoshop's layer-based editing system allows you to manipulate and combine multiple layers to create different visual effects in a single image. Each of the layers you create appears as a distinct layer on the layer palette. Each layer can represent a pixel on a scanned image, a cross-section of an image, or a single color (or hue or tint) in the image, for example. With multiple layers you can overlay multiple areas on an image, such as the background, foreground, and various colors. Creating layers Creating a new layer is as simple as clicking the New Layer button on the layer palette and then choosing one of the following shapes, depending on the kind of layer you want to create (Figure 3-3): An ordinary image is represented by a new layer called a layer. Unlike new image layers, the layer you create in Photoshop remains in the current document and doesn't replace the existing layers. In other words, a layer doesn't move from place to place on an image. Crosshairs is like a layer with a crosshairs around its middle; you can draw or paint directly over this layer. When you work with a crosshairs layer, you can temporarily block out all the areas where you work. A window represents a layer with a transparent window around it. When you work with a window layer, all the areas inside it are temporarily blocked out so that you can see the image behind the window. You can also work with a window to create an image. **Figure 3-3:** To create a new layer, click the New Layer button on the layer palette. An adjustment layer is represented by a new layer with a blue, teardrop-shaped icon at the bottom of the palette. Typically, an adjustment layer enables you to change the appearance of an existing layer by manipulating its opacity. You can create an adjustment layer by right-clicking the layer and choosing Adjustment⇒Levels or Adjustment⇒Curves. A selection is represented by a new layer with a full-circle icon. You can create a selection layer by selecting the desired area and pressing the Ctrl (Windows) or ⌘ (Mac) key. A mask layer is represented by a new layer with a color square next to it. A mask layer allows you to apply one or more selection

Then go to "Image" > "Adjustments", which will open up the "Select" tab. You should see five tool icons on the left. By clicking on each one you can play around with the image as you wish. 1. Add contrast Go to "Image" > "Adjustments", then "Contrast". This will bring up a window asking you to choose the "Contrast" tab. Choose the middle of the slider and it will highlight from 0 to 200. You can also change the "Midpoint" of the histogram to choose where the focus of the image is. 2. Brightness and Exposure Go to "Image" > "Adjustments", then "Brightness/Exposure". The first thing you'll see is a histogram. This is the bit that shows you where most of the colors of the image are. There are three sliders. The middle one is for brightness. This is where you'll want to slide the lowest slider until it turns green. The top slider is for exposure. Change this to the left slider and it's the same as the brightening feature, but this time you want to slide the left slider as far as you can to the right. To adjust for contrast or to add a black and white version of your image, go to "Image" > "Adjustments", then "Curves". This will bring up a window with several sliders. 3. Levels a681f4349e

Q-SQL: update a set of rows, where other criteria are met I have two large tables, both structured as A, B, A.iD in table B refers to A.iD. I want to do a query which will set A.thing to TRUE when there are no rows in A.thing where B.iD=x. The query itself is basically UPDATE A SET thing = TRUE WHERE NOT EXISTS (SELECT * FROM A JOIN B ON A.iD = B.iD WHERE B.iD=x) Is there a way to write a query that will do that without using a stored procedure? The idea here is that I want to be able to change A.iD from time to time, so I don't want to have to rebuild every query I write to do this. A: Yes, you can do an in clause: UPDATE A INNER JOIN b ON A.iD = B.iD SET A.thing = 1 WHERE B.iD = @b.iD A closed-circuit television system has a plurality of cameras which form a plurality of video processing channels. The cameras have a cross-point relay matrix for selecting the cameras for each video processing channel. A video system has a video monitor for each video processing channel. Each video monitor has a simple black and white display or an NTSC color display. The cameras and video monitors are controlled by a video processing controller. Each video processing controller is a computer. Each video processing controller is a personal computer. In an alternative embodiment, the cameras form video processing channels and have a cross-point relay matrix for selecting the cameras for the video processing channel. The camera housing has a "test" switch. The switch is used to simulate an input switch. The test switch simulates all inputs and outputs. It is placed in a test position. The system runs a first test when the test switch is in the test position. The system runs a second test when the test switch is in the normal position. In a further alternative embodiment, the cameras form video processing channels and have a cross-

Open vs. arthroscopic percutaneous knee joint fixation: a literature review. In a study of the English-language literature published between 1980 and the beginning of 1988, 22 case reports of arthroscopic and 24 case reports of open fixation of knee dislocations were found. Both methods appear to be safe and effective for treatment of knee dislocations. There is a trend toward arthroscopic fixation of knee dislocations. Further controlled studies are needed to determine which method is the most cost-effective.Q: Better control of pagination I am using CodeIgniter to develop a website.
