Create backup copies of Blu-ray discs in one click One of the biggest advantages of Blu-ray discs is their high quality content. There is no doubt that they can't be replaced by your regular DVDs, but Blu-ray to DVD enables you to create a backup copy of the content of your favorite movies, at a much lower cost than owning the original discs. The only thing that you have to do is select the source disc (DVD or Blu-ray) and click on the "Create backup" button. After that, the program will detect the disc, read its content and create a backup copy of it. You can use your backup copies as many times as you want, since the quality of the disc is unaffected by multiple backups. On the other hand, they will not support any special features that may be available on the original discs, like DTS or TrueHD audio. Choose the output format, copy or burn What you should remember, however, is that the output format affects the size of your resulting backup files, not the content. You can choose between various options, depending on whether you want to create an ISO file to burn to CD or DVD, or an MPEG or MKV file for further editing. In case you are more of a casual user and want to create a simple backup of your Blu-ray disc, you can opt for copying the disc in a single folder, or you can set an external drive or an FTP site to automatically synchronize its content on a regular basis.
