BIM is a three-dimensional building information modeling technology for the design and construction industries. The acronym stands for Building Information Modeling. The idea behind BIM is to use the digital information of a building or construction project as soon as it is created instead of putting it off until it is finished. This ensures the correct information is available at the right time, as well as reduces the possibility of mistakes and errors. You can use BIM in any type of building or construction project, from residential construction to hospitals and schools. date I have a home server with samba installed on it, I would like to be able to easily share my home folder with my friends on a windows and linux box. When I made my samba share it was on a 4GB drive, now I have 8GB installed in the same machine, when I share the files on the 8GB drive it duplicates the contents of the 4GB drive. The 4GB drive is also full, how can I make sure that the files are only stored on the 8GB drive when people try to access it? A: You have created a read only share - which is fine as long as you are on the same LAN. You will want to modify the share permissions to be read write - then you can share with all users - and also include users on their local systems. To achieve this, use the following command: `smbpasswd`. Then enter the following information (for the server "samba", the user "andrew"):

`andrew ca3bfb1094`
