Consumerization of IT: The Facts about PCs, tablets and smartphones and its consequences for business The rise of smartphones, tablets, and PCs capable of running a wide range of applications has been an important technological development. More importantly, the rapid proliferation of such devices is an even more important cultural and business development. Most businesspeople, managers and professionals see smartphones, tablets and business devices as they appear to be not sufficiently powerful and capable of engaging in the kind of productivity work that their companies actually need in order to compete. This is a particularly significant point about the broader rise of "consumerization of IT" and the organizations and tasks that business people currently use their mobile devices for.
