How does the video below show off FIFA 22's "HyperMotion Technology"? "Just like FIFA 19, FIFA 22 will introduce a depth of physicality to the game. In fact, the entire FIFA experience has been reworked in order to take player performance, tactics and ball physics to new heights, making you feel like a real football player. One of the key areas which has seen the biggest evolution is match day, which has been rebuilt to reflect the physical demands of our sport." FIFA players will now be able to experience the passion, intensity and excitement of the game in much more realistic ways, with new simulation features designed to accurately recreate the physical demands of our sport. Players that improve their Power rating are rewarded by coaches and teams to improve their tactical play. Continuing on from FIFA 19, FIFA 22 will introduce a new detail layer named "Player Rating Detail", in which players will now show individual ratings on specific game variables. In FIFA 22, players will also be able to take the 'Supersized' version of the EA SPORTS Player Performance Index, which has been redesigned in order to better reflect the complexities of the game, through the addition of thousands of new variables. Orbis Footwork "Orbis Footwork" has been improved to reflect the complete range of movement between shots and passes, and new off-the-ball intelligence allows for greater awareness of a player's position on the pitch. Players can now gain and lose control of the ball more rapidly and players can move and recover in response to any change of course or direction.
