Millions of animals are killed unnecessarily for cosmetic surgery - vanguard122 ===== catalogia It's nice to know people who are primarily good at performing simple tasks (like disabling a computer remotely) are also quite skilled at performing human-like tasks (like giving animals lobotomies). --- vanguard122 If the idea that cats are un-self-aware drives you insane perhaps you would disagree that the lobotomies on these cats are a somewhat complex human-like task? Q: How to distribute PDF files to customers using PDF Crocodoc? I am looking for a PDF croc publisher solution and I chose Crocodoc Because it is a very simple design to manage e-mail content and it is easy to understand for users. So, for instance, I have a PDF content document which I would like to distribute to a large amount of customers. How can I use the PDF publisher to publish my PDF content to each customer? Any idea? A: Crocodoc can be used to send PDF files through SMTP using the power of the configuration file or through FTP. To send a PDF through SMTP you need to create a HTML file with a link pointing to a web service and upload the PDF to that service, or you can also upload the PDF to a folder on your server, and create a link pointing to the link to a file that will store the PDF. To send a PDF through FTP, which is the best way in my opinion, you need to upload the PDF to the upload/ directory of your Crocodoc folder, and in the same directory (upload/folder) you need to create a remote folder (for instance you can name it) with the name of each recipient, and then you only need to create an FTP link pointing to the remote folder. I hope this helps. To learn more you can check this guide about publishing PDF through Crocodoc. Q: Why is the plane with the maximum wing area the heaviest plane? Does anybody have a good explanation why the plane with the most wing area has the heaviest wings? A: Wings are pretty much at the bottom of the part list of engines. The engines are the most expensive parts of any aircraft. The wings are usually the cheapest part. The wing must be strong enough to carry the weight of the rest of the aircraft. The "Daytona Beach" race in February is a tradition that is not always a tradition in the Daytona International Speedway's 47-year history. Beginning in 1974, the Daytona 500 may have brought NASCAR's biggest track and one of its biggest events, but since the beginning of the end of World War II, the Dixiecrat-sanctioned Winston Cup Series race has typically been contested by far smaller fields. Race attendance is normally 250,000 or fewer, and the car count typically hovers around 150, even in the loud, loose crowd of big-time horsepower and good American food. Average finish? Around 17th place, a rare blowout race is not out of the ordinary. The Feb. 15 event is shaping up to be especially disappointing for race fans. The season-opening Daytona 500, won by Kevin Harvick, drew 284,000 people. The month of February's race is expected to post fewer than 300,000. "It's a serious challenge. I know the budgets are a little bit smaller than they used to be," said David Simkovic, a veteran chief operating officer for NASCAR who runs its sprint and occasional national series. It is a challenge which comes after the track's $1.9 billion facelift, an $80 million "Daytona Rising" grand opening with a street party and a calendar full of events throughout the year, and a controversial overhaul of the infield following the 2011 flood. "We're really very busy. We have some really interesting special events: Salute to Racing, Pre-kness weekend and what we call a Play Day in the infield," said Richard Buck, the Daytona chief engineer. "We have a program that works well for the fans. We really get to the point of helping them forget about the racing. The infield's the first place they're focusing on -- the restaurants. It's the food. They've put a lot of time, effort and money into building out the infield"
