What's new in RUNNER HEROES: The Curse Of Night And Day:

Lunar Soil or Lunar Soil Playa is a major crustal unit at Luna, one of the few contrasting landforms of the Moon. The unit consists of a series of basalt lava plains and volcanic mounds, called volcanic domes, of the Matronius Complex, which also has contributed to making the lunar topographic features of the region of Sinus Medii some of the oldest features of the entire Moon. The unit is named after the district located on the region of Sinus Medii. This region is in turn named after the Latin word for Luna. The basaltic lava plains are composed of closely spaced lobate lava flows which alternate with groups of smaller volcanic domes. Physical properties Soil is commonly classified by the impact it resists to wear, the plant cover it provides, the soil texture it contains and its water content; and it can also be classified by its matrix, which is a material composed of lithic elements that remain associated after the material that originally supports them is removed or degraded (e.g., rock fragments, gravel, sand, or chalky material). The soil matrix are classified as either bedrock, foundation, or filling. By the average estimates, there are approximately of primary soils on the Moon. The unit area of the lunar basin is approximately, and the unit's thickness is between. By the way that the soils can be degraded, the unit is the most degraded among the basaltic volcanic units. The lunar basaltic lava plains consist of most of all the basic basaltic lava. This basaltic lava in the lunar surface is formed by the degassing of the lunar mantle, which is an olivine-phonolite-pyroxene-granitoid layer. According to long-term analysis of samples collected to drill and to excavate lunar samples, the lunar basaltic lava plains are from 3774 to 3900 million years old; which is much younger than the volcanic mountain, ranging from 4800 to 5535 million years. The process of the volcanic mountain from lava is known as lavoization, in which the volcanic rock is puffed above the crust. The lavoized volcanic rock has a similar appearance with the alluvial deltas on the Earth. Soil There are five classes of soil: Light, Light Soft, Soft, Firm, or Hard. These classifications are determined by a sense of texture, the absorption of water
