A transiting gas giant planet has been found in orbit around the star TRAPPIST-1, a rocky star that just one day (!) is at the same distance as the Earth from the Sun. The star is less than 1/3 the size of the Sun and the planet, TRAPPIST-1b, is one of the first planets that is compatible with the notion of habitable planets. Although no water has been found yet, liquid water is necessary to create life on the planet, so this is a very exciting discovery and should propel the field of exoplanet research in general to a new level. The planet in our solar system. Earth has a mass of 5.9724 × 1023 kg, so TRAPPIST-1b has a mass of 5.9724 × 1023 kg, so TRAPPIST-1b has a mass about 7.7 times that of Earth. TRAPPIST-1b is about 1.3 billion years old and about 39.5 light years from Earth. The planet orbits close to its star and takes roughly 7 days to complete an orbit. It is a gas giant, which means it has an atmosphere. For an estimate of how massive TRAPPIST-1b is, the radius of the planet is important for two reasons. First, the radius determines the amount of mass-energy it takes to lift the planet into space, and so it determines the strength of the tides on the planet. Second, the gravity of the planet radius. The planet radius is therefore the most important parameter for calculating its mass. The TRAPPIST-1 star has an effective temperature of about 1260 kelvin,
