Traditionally, SMS traffic has been delivered to a user device using the Short Message Service (SMS) protocol over a mobile phone network. With the advent of mobile computing, mobile software applications have expanded the data capability of mobile devices and allowed users to communicate in ways that would be difficult or impossible using SMS alone. Bulk SMS Sender provides users access to a global SMS network where they can send mass or personalized messages to a variety of contacts. The basic flow of work remains the same, but in this case a user is presented with a list of recipients which they can select. After selecting recipients, the details of each contact (name, address, etc.) are presented to the user. Once the user is ready to send, they enter their information and the message is sent instantly. If the user enters the wrong information, they are notified and can correct it before they send. If a message is too short for the recipient, a notification to that effect is displayed. All messages are delivered in a single-shot batch, which allows multiple users to send SMS messages simultaneously. SMS has several disadvantages including the high cost per message, the need for the recipient to accept the message, the lack of any guarantee of delivery or return receipt, and the need for the user to have a mobile phone. Bulk SMS Sender allows users to avoid the costs associated with sending SMS messages by bypassing the mobile network. Other benefits include the option to send messages to various contact groups, to receive messages on the phone, and to receive a confirmation when the messages are delivered.
