Based in the wonderful world of shoebox diorama, The Indestructible Moxy Boxy is a precision, twin-stick shooter where you heal and reload by inhaling defeated enemies. Each Boxy creature is unique in their abilities, pattern and purpose. But even Boxy's of the same color share the same weaponry: spears, spears and Spears! Each act adds a new color to the Boxy world. Boxy's of a specific color become vulnerable to a specific set of attacks, or in the case of the Zomboxies, they become a target to be destroyed with the ultimate exception: the indestructible, untouchable Moxy Boxy. It's simple: get at least two of the same colored enemies in a 2 x 2 grouping. Then kill them all! Get good enough and you'll master the one pair of attacks that every Boxy is vulnerable to. Your fingers will be doing double-duty, loading and firing as you pull of the deadliest attack of them all. It's an identity crisis, and you're the patient doctor. More than 75 million people listen to the show each week in over 150 countries. In addition to playing music, listeners have connected with the Bassline Sinker on social media with more than 6.5 million Facebook followers. Related As a young man growing up in Jamaica, Errol Nicholas spent a lot of time with his cousins in the back yard. Even though they were older, Errol immersed himself in their childish ways. "The cousins used to say, 'Can you do this and this,' so I was learning how to play football, wrestling, making all kinds of stuff," Errol recalled. Eventually, one day, he asked his cousins if he could join them at the local beach. With his friends, Errol spent the day making sandcastles, tossing balls in the water and generally having fun. Errol was fast and had a natural ability. At the beach, he became a premier football goalie and quickly excelled at it. By age 12, Errol was able to match a goal against any of his cousins. "I just went from being a little kid to being in a league with all these big boys," he said. It was at that time that a soccer club appealed to him in ways that no one else had. Little did he know that the soccer club that had just become his home would bring a level of fame, glory and prosperity that would last him the rest of his life. Yes, Errol Nicholas liked soccer because he was good at it. However, on that fateful day at the beach, soccer was a game of big boys, and as the noise subsided, Errol's friends swarmed him, wanting to play football. Undeterred by their charm, Errol stayed for the rest of the day and that day changed the future of the soccer club known as BASSline. It might be common knowledge today, but at the time of Errol's birth in 1954, soccer, like all sports in Jamaica, was not part of the regular curriculum. It was the chance to play sports such as football, cricket and athletics that was attractive to most boys and young men. Soccer was a hobby for some and, for others, a happening place with flamboyant characters. The story of the early days of BASSline can be divided into three sections. The first was that of a young man named Herbie Covington. Herbie began as a groundskeeper
