A prospective randomized double-blind study was performed on 180 consecutive patients who underwent hip arthroplasty, using cefonicid and cefazolin as post-operative prophylaxis. No differences were found in the two groups in terms of surgical trauma, underlying disease, or pre-operative antibiotic therapy, or in the length of stay in hospital, or in subsequent post-operative complications. for a simpler analysis. The data are consistent with SM on the three-fold. Extension to $n > 3$
----- We now extend the previous considerations to the general case of trees that are non-planar, in the sense that they have nontrivial connected components or multiple trees. There are 3^n different trees for $n=2$, but the non-planarity adds new constraints, so that a more realistic number is 3^{n+2} , as every tree has $n+2$ roots. These subtrees can be interpreted as non-overlapping and non-intersecting polygons in the interior of a 3^n -dimensional hypercube. Once the set of internal polygon boundaries has been determined, we can associate a loop L_I to each site I (sub-interval of a branch of the tree). Fig. \[figure:singlesite_n\] shows an example with $n=3$. If the internal boundaries of the subtrees are the vertices of a dual tree, a site I becomes a leaf of the dual tree if there is no bifurcation going through the interior of the 3^n -dimensional hypercube between I and the next closest branch from the boundary. Let us call a site I if it is a root of some tree and if the closest vertices to I that are not roots of this tree are leaves of the dual tree. This means that a site I can have a tree of a given boundary only if there are no other leaves of this tree that can share a vertex with I . In Fig. \[figure:singlesite_n\], $I=\{1,2,3\}$ is an outer root, $I=\{0,4,5,6\}$ is an inner root and $\{4,5,6\}$ is a leaf of the dual tree. In Fig. \[figure:site_loop_example\] we show an example with $n=2$ and $m=2$ with a different color coding. An important property of the dual tree is the fact that its genus is $n+2$, as we can have $n+2$ external faces with the $n+2$ roots from the 3^n -dimensional
