Multiple-reaction monitoring (MRM) in liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry (LC-MS/MS) is a potentially useful tool for the routine screening and confirmation of anabolic steroids (A-S) in fish. The objective of this study was to establish and validate MRM conditions for the confirmation and routine screening of several A-S in fish. Different MRM transitions, collision energies, dwell times, and cone and source temperatures were optimized. The relative intensity, LODs, and the recoveries were investigated. Most of the MRM transitions in matrix methanol (containing 50% methanol and 50% acetonitrile) were found to be suitable for quantitative and qualitative determinations and were used for routine screening of 33 A-S in three types of fish (silver bream, silver arowana, and rainbow trout) from different samples. This screening method was validated by the analysis of the matrix reference material, G.D.M. (2), and yielded recoveries between 70 and 113% with relative standard deviations ranging from 5 to 35%. In addition, the LC-MS/MS system has been successfully applied for the confirmation and routine screening of several A-S, e.g., zeranol, trenbolone acetate, fluoxymesterone, oxymetholone, boldenone, and methandienone in fish. The method is suitable for routine screening of A-S residues and may be an alternative method for A-S screening in fish if the equipment cannot be equipped with GC-MS. This method, however, is not sensitive enough to determine extremely low levels of A-S in fish.first of all, I want to say thank you so much for
