For Barack Obama and his handlers, it was a rare opportunity to see if the president could hold up his end of the metaphorical "tray" at an event where he's supposed to be the guest of honor. CNN's Anderson Cooper made no bones about his intentions as the host of the gala at Washington's Walter E. Washington Convention Center. "I'm asking Barack Obama if he will tell the truth about his name," Cooper said at the start of his questioning. "The question is, will the President of the United States give an honest answer to the question of whether he considers his middle name, 'Hussein,' to be an embarrassment?" If you didn't watch the video, Anderson Cooper did exactly what you were expecting. After the audio failed to break into Obama's first reply, Cooper asked, "Hussein. Are you familiar with the name Hussein?" Obama's eyes widened and he smiled. Then he said, "My name is Barack Hussein Obama." "You see the contradiction. You know the name and you know the embarrassment," Cooper said. "So will you drop the name Barack Hussein Obama." Obama: "It is a name that was given to me by my parents, and it is a name that I wear proudly. And I think that all the people who are suggesting that somehow, I have done anything to see to it that my name is not easily pronounced or easily understood -- and I think that's important, and I think that's part of what being part of this country is all about." No question about it, this was an important moment in 6d1f23a050
