But the United States had not yet discovered his future -- and Marquez needed to travel far to find it. "At that time, I had no idea that one day I would be playing in Major League Soccer," Marquez said. "I looked at the (soccer) calendar and the year was 2003, and I told myself, 'Maybe I can do it.' " After a trip to the U.S. to play for a week with a friend, Marquez decided to stay in the States. He enrolled at California State University, Long Beach and found a sponsor, a man who offered to pay for his tuition, if he agreed to work for him the rest of his life. He still had his doubts, however. "The second I came here, I was kind of lonely, because in Ecuador I knew many people," Marquez said. "I didn't know anyone. I was kind of new in the country. I didn't know nothing about the culture, or the people." But he quickly found out who people were. Marquez played 25 games with the D.C. United and Portland Timbers before being traded to the New York Red Bulls in 2011. He was a key figure in the 2011 and 2012 CONCACAF Gold Cup championships, before returning to play for Los Angeles Galaxy in 2013. After a brief return to DC, Marquez found himself back in New York, with a contract that included a guaranteed salary, and before he knew it he was playing in a training camp with other young men who were also dreaming of 6d1f23a050
