(2017-11-18).Datura alba Datura alba, the white trumpet vine, is a perennial plant native to India and Sri Lanka, and widely naturalised in Australia. In the United States, where it is popular in horticulture, it is commonly called white thorn apple. Appearance It is a stout, branching shrub that grows high and wide, with dense, white-grey, spear-shaped inflorescences of flowering stalks that appear at the end of branches in summer. The plant can grow in full sun, or in partial shade. In temperate regions such as much of Australia, New Zealand, and North America, it blooms between December and April. History The plant is a native of South and Southeast Asia, where it is often naturalised. It is now grown extensively in the United States, where it is nicknamed the white thorn apple. Toxicity Datura is highly toxic and has been a plant of interest for more than two centuries. For example, in 1722 (when the plant was only introduced to Europe), it was observed that " 6d1f23a050
