We strive to keep our collection constantly growing and have many new features and aspects in development. We invite you to follow us on: I personally don't like the curtains. However, I have found a way to get the effect that I want. It's actually easier to change the "inner layer" color than I thought. I made a screensaver in which I paint layers on top of each other. It's fun to experiment and create your own custom screensaver. Add this news item i love your site. I've been a member since the beginning. I keep coming back just because I enjoy the photos and the ease of use. You, and your staff, are a great help to me and a pleasure to deal with. I love the curtains. And I love the video. It's very impressive. And the move and the music. I love all of it, but mostly I love the curtains. Where can I get more information about the blobs? (image similarity, etc.) I'd like to try and implement something like this, but I don't understand enough about the underlying code. I'm looking for more information on exactly what the blobs are and how they work. Can you tell me where I can find it? There is a little green dot that appears on the layer of the screen. What is it? I just want to know. I would like to know how to change it to change the 2 layer border. Thanks. Update: I got my wife to edit the windows. It looks very nice with the new curtains. But I have the.png changed so it's even more attractive. Maybe someone can look at the screensaver and tell me what to do. I like the screensaver. Then don't mess with it. It
