The following are the most significant changes between the stable version of Lightroom 5 and the final version, Lightroom 5.2 Beta 1:

- An update to the user interface with the return of a default browser to navigate to the Library window, the addition of a top-level categories and thumbnails, a tabbed view of categories, and the ability to zoom in to the page and page level.
- Improved support for a flat view of large catalogs and libraries and the ability to easily move products within a library. Navigate to the new display of images, products, and previews with a single click of the mouse.
- A new feature called Smart Previews, which offers a simple visual workflow to resize and crop images.
- Improved accessibility options (especially for color blindness) and made it much easier to export images in RAW and other supported formats. Lightroom 5 also enables you to export only the selected images and even to batch export to other related programs.
- Quality results of exported images are the best ever now, and you can even increase the 'sharpening level' to sharpen everything.
- Lightroom 5 adds both a basic and advanced Metadata editor to provide quality value for your images.
- Lightroom 5 is nearly 5 times faster than Lightroom 4.3, and adding a memory leak fix.
- Orphan tags (tags that do not have people recognizable, or the people themselves) are fixed too.

Overall, Lightroom 5 seems to be a solid update and most of the changes are welcome. It does come out of beta relatively quickly though, so I expect we'll see some bugs fixed in the coming weeks.

Technology in recent times has helped us grow in so many ways. When I was younger, I remember reading about the new years and the latest tech news. This was before I even had a computer or an internet connection. Back then it was very exciting to hear about new tech. I had no idea what I was really getting myself into until I had kids. I now have a stream of news and articles coming in each day for all of these different technologies. For example, I now own an iPad but never owned an iPad until I had kids. It's amazing every day to see the things in life that people are creating. The amazing thing is we are always growing. By using technology the way we are using it today, means we will continue to grow exponentially. You will see in the future a lot more of what we have enjoyed today be created so quickly in reality.
